There is nothing new under the sun, save it be the willingness of writers to acknowledge the truism. Benjamin Musser. A GOSPEL OF REALITY While The French and German armies remained in grim opposition across the narrow but celebrated little stream, the Yser, a French school-girl of fourteen wrote a composition as follows: There is a river so narrow that it is perfectly easy to talk with one on the opposite bank, so small that a swallow could cross it at a single stroke of the wing--and yet its two sides are as far apart as the poles, because they bristle with hate. There is an ocean so broad that the strongest sea-gull would not attempt the...
